Governor Gordon displays an angry tongue in Ohio. He is a slick citizen but he fools nobody.

Eighteen thousand young women are pursuing studies in the colleges of the United States.

Governor Gordon "roars you" as "gentle as a sucking dove" since he got this side of the Ohio River.

Governor Foraker is having a fine reception at St. Paul today and will speak in Xenia on Thursday.

If we may believe the ex-Confederate Gordon everything is lovely in the South. But we can't believe him.

The duke of Marlborough intends to sail for England in about two weeks. He may sail sooner if he wishes to.

It is believed at Washington that the supreme court will refuse to grant a writ of error in the case of the anarchists.

The republicans of Maryland are still in the field and hard at work, hoping for good results on the day of the state election.

The Memphis Appeal says: "The South has invaded the North in the person of General Gordon." That is about the shape of it.

It is now thought that the mind of Rev. H. M. Cock, who froze to the flat-iron, is unsettled. At any rate, he hasn't settled for the flat-iron.

Not a person escaped to tell the story of the wreck of the steamer Vesper, on Lake Michigan. Thirty-six persons are supposed to have gone down with her.

THE NORTH-AMERICAN REVIEW.

The most remarkable paper in the November number of this magazine is entitled "The Agnostic Side," with which Robert G. Ingersoll occupies thirty pages in replying to an open letter addressed to him in a previous number by Rev. Henry M. Field, D. D. Robert starts out with the remark, "I answer your letter because it is mainly, candid, and generous," and then proceeds to blast religion, especially Presbyterianism, with the same old bugle notes that have sounded round the world. It is Robert's latest eloquence on his old theme, and it will be read with a new astonishment.

"Possibilities of Animal Intelligence" is a curious attempt to show that the lower animals are approaching man in the progress of intelligence, and that the expectation of such a further advancement of them by man's aid as to teach them to express their thoughts to him through speech is by no means absurd. It would make a dog laugh to read this article.

"Possible presidents, Senator John Sherman" is an able presentation of the reasons why our great senator should be the nominee of the next republican national convention. We have all along believed he should, and this argument (said to have been written by Judge William Lawrence) is so convincing that now we know it. Hurrah for John Sherman!

Other readable contributions to this number are, Gail Hamilton's "A Chestnut Burr," being all about "the Andover fuss"; "Those Wonderful Clippers," being all about Bacon's hogging of the fame of Shakespeare (factitious); and "Primitive Simplicity," being all about about the anarchists' proposition to put mankind back on all fours.

There are several other interesting essays and comments, which make this issue fully worth the one-twelfth of the subscription price—$5 a year, New York.

THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY.

The November number has the sixth of those fascinating papers on "French and English," by claiming Philip Gilbert Hamerton; the second of Percival Lowell's ingenious analysis of "The Soul of the Far East;" three historical studies, entitled "The Red Cross," "The Adoption of the Constitution" (John Fiske), and "Mistic Points at Fort George Island;" three literary essays, entitled "A Lady of the Old School," "An Old Road," and "The Novelists of the Time;" two poems above the Boston average, "In Mortis Immobilitate," and "Dreams" (Edith Thomas); contributions of the two serials, "Paul Patoff" and "The Second Son;" besides the usual variety of other interesting things which the American mind of luxurious habits must have from month to month. (Boston, Houghton, Mifflin & Co., $4 a year.)

There does not seem to be much prospect, just now, that Henry George and his followers are to seize all the land in the United States and divide it up. People who have earned money by hard work, and bought land, and built on it, will be apt to keep it. So will all others, who have acquired land in an honest, legal way. If all the land in America were divided among its people, today, in equal quantities, pauperism would not be abolished. In five years, if not in a shorter period, there would be the usual number of people requiring aid.

With Randall and his handful of followers in the house, and the republicans to back him, and with republican majority in the senate, what chance is there for revenue reform?—Memphis Appeal.

With so many republicans in both houses, aided by a few democrats who are wise and sensible enough to favor the protection of American industries, there seems to be no chance at all for revenue reform.

A very interesting fight for honesty and decency is now in progress in New York city, in which the republicans and the Irving Hall democrats are arrayed against Tammany and the County Democracy.

The Star is now the only real democratic organ in New York city. It has the requisite stripes around its body, and the rings around the tail which are necessary to demonstrate its genuineness.

DeWitt Talmage reaches a larger number of persons by his spoken and printed sermons than are reached by any other man in America. He is now the great Brooklyn preacher.

Six hundred thousand dollars is to be divided among the dependents of Fidelity bank—25 per cent. It is expected that the next dividend will be ready in about a year.

Our Ohio democratic papers disapprove of Jeff Davis with a "but," which is the most prominent feature of their utterances.

Wrench in a Printing Press.

A perfecting press, such as most leading newspapers are printed on, is an expensive and intricate piece of machinery. The root runs up among the thousands of dollars, and it consists of many delicate parts, and it is not a thing to be trifled with. Imagine the sensations of a leading publisher one day this week, when he saw an iron wrench go crashing through his press, following the path designed for a single thickness of paper. It was the fault of a careless pressman, who had started the machine with removing the wrench, which he had been using. In an instant, so rapid is the motion of these presses, cylinders were broken, wheels twisted out of shape, thousands of dollars of damage done, and, most aggravating of all, the wrench came out unimpaired.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

The Typical American.

And he is entirely too cosmopolitan to be so. As yet, any one of her citizens who can be accepted as the typical American. Our population is today more diverse than when the thirteen colonies were settled. As a nation we are uniting, but as a people, in the ethnological sense, we have not yet commenced to exist. And why should we? No race was ever formed in so short a time as has elapsed since the settlement of America, to say nothing of the constant accessions to our population from every country in the world.

May be in 1,000 years from now we shall have begun to develop the typical American, but not short of that time.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Who Discovered the Hudson River?

A map of the world, made in 1529, received at the State library at Albany, although made long before Henry Hudson was born, shows the Hudson River. It is a fine example of the map by Ribeiro, called the Borgia map. Who discovered the Hudson River, is therefore, still an open question.—Boston Journal.

The market price of a letter written by George Washington is $25, while an epistle from the hand of George D. Prentice brings $50.

THE PEOPLES PARTY.

WHAT THE REPUBLICAN PARTY HAS DONE FOR ALL CLASSES.

Eloquent Presentation of Some Past History and Present Intentions of the Grand Party of the People.

The following is from Governor Foraker's speech at Cleveland, O., October 17: "I want now to express my gratification, not simply that we should have this magnificent outpouring of Republicans here to-night, but also that I should see here to-night, as I saw to-day in the procession that escorted me from the depot to the hotel, all classes, all ages, all conditions of society so fully represented. [Applause.] I am glad to see the old men here, the bald-headed fellows who voted for Fremont and Lincoln [laughter and applause], and then hand-somely kept up the lick when they voted for Grant and Hayes and Garfield, and all the other illustrious men who have represented Republicanism in the chief magistracy of this great nation. [Applause.] I am glad to see the colored men here, and to see their presence in such goodly numbers, such a manifestation of appreciation on their part of that great debt they owe to the cause of Republicanism that has done so much for them. [Applause.] I am glad to see the workmen here, showing by their presence on this occasion their appreciation of the fact that it was the Republican party that first made it honorable to labor in this country [applause]; their appreciation of the fact that it was the Republican party that inaugurated a system of giving home-roads to actual settlers in the west; that it was the Republican policy of a protective tariff, under which we have had such a magnificent development of the industries of the United States of America during the last quarter of a century [applause]; a protective tariff system under which great cities like Cleveland, have sprung up all over the land; a protective tariff system under which our country has been covered with railroads; under which we have been given diversity of industry and employment; under which we have been afforded home markets for all the products of agriculture; and under which, in twenty-five years, the accumulations of 250 years of American civilization have been tripled in the point of wealth as the result of that which has been done. I am glad also to see here the old veterans. I saw some of them in line to-day; some of them who had only one arm; some of them who bore scars that indicated service in behalf of their country, and I am especially gratified to see such a good representation of Union veterans. We had a great many of them in the procession; we had a great many of them at the reception this afternoon, and I see a great many of them in this audience to-night.

"I do not know what would be agreeable to me, if I had the time to devote to it this evening, than to recall the past records of the Democratic and Republican parties, and point out thereby the extreme good fortune it is to a young man to have judgment enough and sense enough in taking his stand politically to place himself with this great, progressive Republican party. [Applause.] I should like to impress upon his mind, as only such a recital could, that all that is good and great and grand and illustrious in the last twenty-five years of American history has been achieved by this organization. [Applause.] I should like to impress upon him that it was the Republican party that not only suppressed treason and rebellion and shot the heresy of secession to death on the battlefields of the republic; that it was this party that got rid of the shackles of slavery from off the colored people, but that it was this party that also enfranchised them; that this party that reconstructed the states after the war; that it was this party that put forth the greenback in the hour of our greatest peril and made it as good as a gold dollar all over the face of the world in time of peace [applause]; that it was the Republican party that from first to last achieved that which was not only so illustrious, but so acceptable to the American people that when it went out of power as the result of the national election in 1884, it went out, not because it was condemned, but went out with every single purpose, every single principle, every single policy that it had ever espoused or sought to enforce in power, universally approved by Democrats as well as Republicans." [Applause.]

Mr. Powell Has Made Himself a Laughing Stock.

When Governor Foraker wrote his special message urging the equalization of taxation, and demanding official administration of the laws, he did not treat that he was laughing at Powell, but he caught him nevertheless, says the Dayton Journal. Mr. Powell now realizes, doubtless, that no candidate for the office of governor of any state was ever caught in a situation so utterly ridiculous and so thoroughly humiliating. He was taken in the act of evading his taxes for twenty years, and when detected acted like a thief who is caught in the act, and seeks to redeem himself by returning stolen property unbeknownst to anybody but himself. Now we hope to see some Democratic organ or editor will accuse us of calling Mr. Powell a thief because we illustrate his conduct with an apt simile, yet it would be quite as just to do so as it was to charge that Governor Foraker called President Cleveland a dog because he said that Cleveland "quailed like a whipped puppy." Nevertheless, Mr. Powell is doubtless, quite as much disgusted with himself as he is with the Hocking Valley railroad conductor caught him in the act of stealing a free ride on another man's pass—he McCormick pass, we mean.

The Democratic state ticket is rapidly going to pieces, and it may be that the whole combination of it will be taken off before election day gets here.

KASKINE

THE NEW QUININE.

MORE STRONGLY VOUCHERED FOR THAN ANY OTHER DRUG OF MODERN TIMES

A POWERFUL TONIC. That the most delicate stomach will bear. A SPECIFIC FOR MALARIA, RHEUMATISM, NERVOUS PROSTRATION.

THE MOST SCIENTIFIC AND SUCCESSFUL BLOOD PURIFIER. Superior to quinine. Mr. John C. Seabrook, Seabrook, N. H., writes: "I lost malaria in the Southern army, and for a dozen years suffered from its debilitating effects. I was a terrible run-down fellow. I heard of Kaskine, the new quinine. It helped me at once. I gained 25 pounds. Have not had such good health in 20 years."

Other letters of a similar character from prominent individuals, which stamp Kaskine as a remedy of undoubted merit, will be sent on application.

The Agent of KASKINE has a Public Exhibition of a remarkable KASKINE, or model of the human body, showing the stomach, heart, lungs, liver, spleen, kidneys and the other organs and parts in health and in disease. By an inspection the afflicted can see the nature and location of their troubles and learn how Kaskine relieves and cures them. Kaskine can be taken without any special medical advice. $1 per bottle, or six bottles for $5. Sent by mail on receipt of price.
